

MEET LUIS

VIDEO TRANSCRIPT

Change is absolutely essential for survival reinventing yourself inside and outside the workplace can help you embrace it no matter how challenging it may be.

Storytelling is my passion and strength and i can use this skill in most of my work activities here in Accenture.

What I've experienced is that good storytelling can help people understand you better and retain the information you're trying to share, whether it's presenting to a new team or pitching a proposal to clients.

As a manager at SAP Fieldglass, I have many storytelling hats - from being a senior consultant to being a project manager and to also handling sales and solutioning for upcoming client projects.

Here in Accenture, I'm able to use my passion and show my team that they too can create compelling stories with tech and bring them to life.

My leads have given me many business travel opportunities and all of those direct client-facing experiences have helped me polish my presentation skills and build my confidence.

Having calls with clients is convenient but meeting them face to face, that's an adventure.

Truly through the guidance of our mentors and leads we are provided an opportunity to create a better future for ourselves and our clients.

For example, our leaders have instilled in us the importance of listening and supporting each other, so no matter where you come from or where you want to go Accenture is here to help you write that new exciting chapter in your book.

In my line of work, every SAP implementation is a story filled with twists and turns. However, the bottom line is that my teams and I are able to drive #TechForChange by transforming the way our clients see workforce and spend management.

I'm Luis, a business and technology integration architecture manager and storyteller here at Accenture.
