

HONORING OUR MILITARY COMMUNITY

VIDEO TRANSCRIPT

I knew in my junior high school I needed to do something with my life so I joined the Navy. Served 29 years in the military, rose to the highest ranks. My transition from the military to Accenture Federal services still provided me the opportunities to do the things I did in the military.

I grew up with the military. It's just something that our family feels very strongly about. My husband and I retired on the same day. One night, I was on a Hiring our Heroes mentorship call for the SkillBridge program. I was given the opportunity to meet an individual from Accenture Federal Services, and I ended up pitching the Scrum Master veterans program.

When I was transitioning out of the army I wanted to get into a place where I could continue to serve in some capacity and help the country and the government, and where also my skills would be valued.

Accenture Federal Services was the right place for that. I was brought in by another veteran, and he brought me onto his projects, and he really took me under his wing and said, you have the right skills that we need here.

Being able to provide an opportunity to veterans is how I feel like I'm still giving back. The most rewarding aspect was finding a spot where I found a sense of purpose again. The most surprising thing is how willing people are to reach out and help fellow veterans in this space.

What drives me at Accenture Federal Services is the people. The camaraderie is truly amazing. My goal is always to continue to serve our country. Giving the opportunity to just give back.

I ask you to join us in honoring all our service members during Military Appreciation Month, including the over 2000 right here in our Accenture Federal Services Community. We are here because we are proud of our contributions and want to continue to be in service to our nation.
